Table of contents

Introduction 13
1. How I have reached here 13
2. The basic assumptions of the book 17
3. The texts and their historical context 25
4. The Vedic tradition in the early Smṛti texts 34
5. The features of the discourse 35
6. The research approach and methodology 37
   6.1. Categorisation and Idealised Cognitive Models (ICM) 39
   6.2. Conceptual metonymy 41
   6.3. Conceptual metaphor 43
   6.4. Image schemas 46
   6.5. Conceptual blending 48
   6.6. Why cognitive linguistics in research on the history of early Indian philosophical ideas 50
7. Other methodological issues 53
8. Philosophical issues 55
9. General outline of the content of this book 65

1. Creation of the world 69
   1.1. Creation of the world in the Manusmṛti 1 70
      1.1.1. The pre-creative state of the world (MS 1.5) 71
      1.1.2. The first manifestation of the cognitive power of reality (MS 1.6–7) 72
      1.1.3. The manifestation of the highest cognitive agent (Brahma) (MS 1.8–11) 75
      1.1.4. The creation of the mental self (ātman) of reality (MS 1.12–17) 81
      1.1.5. The creation of the sensori-motor self (ātman) of reality (MS 1.18–20) 92

1.1.6. The creation of the ritual self (ātman) of reality (MS 1.21–27) 99
1.1.7. The creation of the social self (ātman) of reality 107
1.1.8. The creation of the human self (ātman) of reality 108
1.1.9. Conclusion 113
1.2. Creation of the world in the early chapters of the Mokṣadharma (175–176, 224) 117
1.2.1. The teaching of Bhṛgu to Bhāradvāja (MDhP 175, 176) 117
1.2.1.a. Mokṣadharma 175 117
1.2.1.b. Mokṣadharma 176 123
1.2.2. The teaching of Vyāsa to Śuka (MDhP 224.33–51) 136
1.2.3. Conclusion 143

2. The manifest aspect of reality 145
2.1. The categories 146
2.1.1. The category of time 147
2.1.2. The category of three and five classes (guṇa) 155
2.1.3. The category of five classes (guṇa) 161
2.1.4. The category of action (karman) 164
2.1.5. The concept of one's own state (svabhāva) 171
2.2. The ambiguity of manifestation 175
2.2.1. The I-form (ahaṃkāra) 176
2.2.2. The concept of māyā in the Bhagavadgītā 178
2.3. The concept of man 183
2.3.1. Man, as a part of society 184
2.3.2. Subject-object cognition in the cosmos and in man 186
2.3.2.a. The cosmic and the human organism and its cognitive faculties (MDhP 187.4–15) 187
2.3.2.b. Everyday subject-object cognition (MDhP 187.16–22) 190
2.3.2.c. A change of perspective. The subject-object cognition of the highest cognitive agent and free men (MDhP 187.23–36) 194
2.3.2.d. The relationship between the highest cognitive agent and reason (MDhP 187.37–43) 200
2.3.2.e. Liberating cognition is cognition of the highest cognitive agent (MDhP 187.44–48) 206
2.3.2.f. The polemics against Buddhism (MDhP 187.49–60) 210
2.4. The concept of mind (manas) 214

2.5. The structure of the cosmos and of man as a manifestation of subject-object cognition 219
2.6. The appearance of moral values and norms 220
2.6.1. The normative and moral value of the three classes (guṇa). 221
2.6.2. The normative character of action, sacrifice and dharma/adharma 224
2.7. The concept of the Brahmin 232
2.8. The concept of truth 239
2.8.1. Truth is pleasure 241
2.9. Conclusion 246

3. Bondage 249
3.1. The lack of knowledge/cognition 250
3.2. The chain of objectification 257
3.2.1. The loss of reason and the inability to use the category of classes (guṇa) 257
3.2.2. The loss of the ability to use the category of action (karman) 265
3.3. The results of objectification for reality 273
3.3.1. The embodied one (dehin, śarīrin) 274
3.3.1.a. The noun dehin 274
3.3.1.b. The noun śarīrin 280
3.3.2. The concept of life (jīva) 284
3.3.2.a. The description of life (jīva) in MDhP 180 (Bhṛgu and Bharadvāja) 285
3.3.2.b. The description of life (jīva) in MDhP 187.7 (Bhīṣma and Yudhiṣṭhira) 294
3.3.2.c. A description of life (jīva) in MDhP 204 and 206 (Master and People) 295
3.3.2.d. A description of life (jīva) in MDhP 212 (Pañcaśikha and Janaka) and 228 (Vyāsa and Śuka) 297
3.3.2.e. A description of jīva in the Bhagavadgītā and Manusmṛti 300
3.4. Conclusion 308

4. Freedom 311
4.1. Suffering (duḥkha) 312
4.2. Desire (kāma) and happiness (sukha) 314
4.3. The liberating role of recitation 317

4.4. Looking for fire. Tapas as transformative heat 323
4.4.1. The fiery nature of tapas and its connection with recitation in MS 2.166–167 327
4.4.2. The fiery nature of tapas and its connection with recitation in MS 11.234–266 329
4.5. Looking for fire. Sāṃhkya, yoga, soft recitation (japa) and its connection with fire 338
4.6. Metaphors of yoga. Fire and journey to freedom. 355
4.6.1. YOGA IS KINDLING OF FIRE 355
4.6.2. YOGA IS RIDING IN A CHARIOT 357
4.7. Liberating cognition 361
4.8. The general model of liberating cognition 363
4.9. Primary subjectivisation 364
4.9.1. Right knowledge, cognition and desire 365
4.9.2. Primary subjectivisation. The suspension of sensual cognition 368
4.9.2.a. Mokṣadharma 188 (Bhīṣma and Yudhiṣṭhira) 369
4.9.2.b. Mokṣadharma 232.3–18 (Vyāsa and Śuka) 375
4.9.2.c. MS 2.88–100 380
4.9.3. Primary subjectivisation. The relationship between the mind (manas) and reason (buddhi) 382
4.9.4. Primary subjectivisation. The use of the class of sattva 390
4.9.5. Primary subjectivisation. Purification 398
4.10. Higher subjectivisation 403
4.10.1. Higher subjectivisation. Metaphors of cognition of the self (ātman) 404
4.10.2. Higher subjectivisation. The Self cognises the Self 408
4.10.2.a. The Self cognises Self according to Bhagavadgītā 6. 408
4.10.2.b. The self cognises self according to Mokṣadharma. 418
4.11. Expanded subjectivisation. 423
4.11.1. LIFE IS A JOURNEY – the four stages of life. 423
4.11.2. The philosophy of action in the Bhagavadgītā and its Vedic grounds 426
4.11.3. The category of sacrifice used in expanded subjectivisation. 434
4.12. Arjuna at the borderline. The final explanation of the role of man in Bhagavadgītā 11 446
4.13. Conclusion 458

5. Early Smṛti thought the lens of the humanities 461
5.1. Compression and mystic experience in Bhagavadgītā 11. 462
5.1.1. The compression of vital relations in the mystic experience of Arjuna. 465
5.1.2. The mystic experience as a conscious compression of vital relations 469
5.2. Storytelling and the two perspectives of the highest cognitive agent 475
5.2.1. Storytelling and cognitive linguistics. 476
5.2.2. Cosmogony as storytelling 477
5.2.3. Brahman as an on-stage narrator in the cosmogony of Mokṣadharma 335 479
5.2.4. Teleology and storytelling. 486
5.2.5. Liberating cognition as changing viewpoints 488
5.2.6. Transmigration – Spoiling the story 490
5.2.7. The creation of the world and soliloquy. 491
5.2.8. The concept of the Absolute as a storyteller. 492
5.3. Early Smṛti philosophy and play 496
5.3.1. The creation of the world, and its existence, is play . . 499
5.3.2. Play as emergent meaning 503
5.3.3. Play and phenomenology 505
5.3.3.a. Eugen Fink 506
5.3.3.b. Hans-Georg Gadamer 510
5.3.4. Play and Psychoanalysis 512
5.3.5. The perspective of free man. Freedom as play. 517
5.3.6. Play and māyā. 521
5.3.7. Play (krīḍā) as the source domain in early Smṛti philosophy 524
5.3.7.a. Play (krīḍā) as the source domain in the cosmogonies of the Manusmṛti and Mokṣadharma 524
5.3.7.b. Play as becoming dirty (krīḍā, līlā) 533
5.3.7.c. The use of the noun krīḍā in the descriptions of liberating cognition 535
5.3.8. The despair of Draupadī. 537
5.4. Early Smṛti philosophy, karman and responsibility 547
5.4.1. Karman and vidhāna. 548
5.4.2. The features of the responsible agent 552
5.4.3. The features of an action for which one can be responsible. Action and its value 553

5.4.4. The features of an action for which one can be responsible. 'Own' action 554
5.4.5. The paradoxical nature of the highest state of responsibility 555
5.4.6. The opposite state of the highest responsibility 557
5.4.7. The ontic fundaments of responsibility. The personal identity of the agent 559
5.4.8. The ontic fundaments of responsibility. The temporality of the world 560
5.4.9. The ontic fundaments of responsibility. The freedom of the agent 561

General Conclusion 564
1. Concluding remarks 564
2. Memory 570
3. Tradition 573
4. The Self 590

Acknowledgements 597

Bibliography 600

Index (English) 627

Index (Sanskrit) 637

Index (Vedic fragments referred to in the book) 644

Index (Fragments discussed in the book) 648